John Curtis notes that the Centennial Exposition in Fairmount Park opened May 10... and at the southeast corner of Broad and Cherry Streets there was a summer garden, under the management of Siebrecht and Cameron, and there a series of concerts were given with an orchestra of sixty, under the baton of Jacques Offenbach. A member of this orchestra was John Philip Sousa.

John Curtis: The Metropolitan Opera House in New York had been destroyed by fire during the summer, so there were no opera performances at the Academy of Music during the 1890-1891 season. After this visit of Miss Juch and her singers, there was the longest operatic hiatus in years, for no more performances were given until until Gustav Hinrichs returned for the summer season in June.

John Curtis: For the slave dance in Amneris' apartment, Mr. Hinrichs had eight genuine little pickaninnies, who in their breech clothes and bare black legs tumbled out on the stage when ordered to do so by the stage manager. They did not know how to dance nor did they know the music, but they cavorted about uncertainly and in deep seriousness, and amused the audience by their efforts. The experiment could hardly be called a success.

1/17/95: Rigoletto: Philadelphia, Academy of Music (Metropolitan Opera Company, New York)

John Curtis: Rigoletto had been announced for January 17 with Melba as Gilda and Scalchi as Maddalena . . . But when the audience arrived it found the doors of the Academy locked and not a sign of opera. The people waited in the biting cold for a long time . . . The company had arrived during the day, and then it was announced that Madame Van Cauteran had been substituted for Madame Melba and Miss De Vigne for Scalchi. [However, Victor Maurel refused to sing with Madame Van Cauteran, who was German by birth. No substitute could be found, so the performance was cancelled.]

John Curtis: Mr. Hinrichs and his associates in management decided to take the company on tour for the balance of the season... but from the beginning business was unsatisfactory, and affairs went from bad to worse, until in St. Louis, it was stranded entirely. News reached Philadelphia, and Alexander J. Cassatt, President of the Pennsylvania Railroad, sent a special train to St. Louis to bring the unfortunate singers home... A couple of performances were given for the purpose of raising money to send the choristers back to Italy, and succeeded to that extent. The principals scattered to seek other engagements. [Unfortunately, Mr. Curtis provides no other details of the tour.]

Lesson scene:

F. Paolo Tosti	Mattinata
Massenet	Sevillana

John Curtis indicates that Mme. Melba sang Tosti's Mattinata and accompanied herself on the piano, then followed it with a repetition of "Sevillana."
